

Coach Trip to the National Trust's Knole House with Henfield Art's Society Wednesday 9th September

Knole House dates from the 15th century with modifications in 16th and 17th centuries. It was occupied by archbishops including Thomas Cranmer and Thomas More. Henry VIII stayed whilst deer hunting. Elizabeth I gave it to Robert Dudley, 1st Earl of Essex. Thomas Sackville (1536 – 1608) acquired the house in 1604 and in his final four years undertook a major refurbishment both inside and out. There will be experts in the rooms all with great knowledge of Knole. Entry to Lord Sackville's 26 acre private garden, which is only open once a month, is included in the cost. Wheelchair accessibility in the house is limited to the ground floor Great Hall. There is a café on site where a meal can be bought, or bring your own packed lunch.
